

Repression: the latest

Montgomery County, Md.: Washington's underground newspaper, the Free Press, may be tried for advocating revolution. Judge James H. Pugh told a Maryland Grand Jury last week that the Free Press "advocates the destruction of state and destruction [sic] between the schools of this country and the duly constituted enforcement agencies thereof." County public officials blame the paper for a wave of student protest in local high schools.